

Block Party

Nathan Curtis

This might be a barred cryptic, but we're going to have a block party nonetheless! In several places throughout the grid, a 2x2 block will get filled by a single letter, which is used once in each of the four entries passing through that block. To make things more challenging, the clues are presented with the answers in alphabetical order. Enumerations are given, but remember that words containing blocks will take up extra space in the grid, as shown. The letters in the blocks, taken in order from top to bottom, will spell another place where you might find a block party.
